Are steroids that bad?

There is much talk about how bad steroids are, which is of course false. Did you know that almost half a million people (a little over 400,000) die from smoking every year? or did you know that almost 100,000 (past 80,000) die from drinking alcohol per year? and did you know that there have been [...] More...

History of Steroids and Anabolic Steroids

The history of anabolic steroids cannot be explained without looking back to when the very beginnings of testosterone were first discovered. It's been widely accepted since ancient times when the testicles were known to be required for male sexual characteristics and development. Then, in the mid-19th century, scientists discovered that removal of the testicles from birds caused a disappearance of male sexual properties.

This led to a lot of different experiments to help scientists figure out how exactly testosterone worked. By the mid-1930's three different scientists had synthesized testosterone making it the first anabolic steroid. Testosterone was tested on dogs to result in them bulking up after which experiments were carried out in men.

It didn't take long for people to realize how using testosterone would help athletes. In 1954, the American Weightlifting Team began using testosterone and the team's doctor, John Ziegler, began working with pharmaceutical companies to refine the substance to be more efficient in enhancing strength.

In 1967, anabolic steroids were banned by the International Olympic Council (IOC) and many sport organizations began following suit. This was the beginning of the ever-continuing struggle between sports organizations and the athletes. Soon, the IOC had a test to determine if athletes had used testosterone steroids, but it didn't take long for the athletes to develop different types of steroids that would work around the tests – the first being a steroid that would leave the body quickly so that it wouldn't show up on the test.

Perhaps the most adept at this was the German Democratic Republic who conducted much of the research in how to use steroids and still remain undetected. In fact, the fact that the government was both researching and concealing steroid use in the country's athletes remained unknown until the late 80's.

This scandal is what has given steroids a bad name. Ironically, however, this is about the same time that the medical community found the benefits of using anabolic steroids for medical purposes in the treatment of certain illnesses and ailments.

Steroids are not out of the public light yet, however. We mostly hear about steroids when professional athletes test positive for using the substance. Steroids are still being widely used in the United States – for both medical purposes as well as by athletes (including high school athletes).

All drugs can be used and abused and the same is true with steroids. According to the law, there are legitimate, approved medical uses of steroids and other, non-legal uses of steroids are often considered abuse by most people. While people who use steroids illegally might be abusing them, this is not necessarily the case.

Anthony Roberts: Ok...without telling us too much about you, can you let us know what your experience with steroids is?

Anon: Well, "without telling us to me about you" needs to be addressed first. I have already been convicted of several things and been through a couple prison systems. I need to state, right from the start, that some of the things I am going to talk about I did indeed experience myself. In some cases, a friend of mine did some of the stuff I will talk about. I can't remember. Basically, if you are from the government and reading this, I assume you know who I am. If I didn't already cop to something that you are reading, you should assume that my friend did it. Back then I was pretty doped up most of the time, so things get a little blurry every now and again. I suspect that other, non-G-men will recognize who I am as well. I'll say something to you later on, if I feel like it. Although it should be obvious that I have the freedom to say whatever I want and artistic license to say it however I want to, if you are reading this and from the government, know that it is a bunch of flat-out lies. I don't ever know what a steroid is. Cool?

Anyhow, I have a little bit of experience with steroids. To put it bluntly, I had the unfortunate distinction of being a fairly important part of what I consider to be the premier anabolics distribution and manufacturing operations of all time: Laboratorios Ttokkyo. Obviously, a white kid from the 'burbs doesn't just fly to Mexico City and apply for the job I had. It was a long and very unique road that we paved and led us to fortune, albeit brief and fleeting.

Cyclist indicted in steroids probe

Former elite cyclist Tammy Thomas was indicted Thursday by a federal grand jury on charges of hindering the government's steroid probe.

Thomas, 36, is accused of four counts of perjury and one count of obstruction of justice for allegedly lying to a grand jury investigating a steroid ring that spanned across many sports.

Olympic officials banned Thomas from competition in August 2002 after the performance enhancing drug Norbolethone was detected in her urine samples, according to court documents.

At the time, the drug was an obscure steroid that had been used in a few human tests in the 1960s and was rediscovered by the rogue chemist Patrick Arnold to boost athletic performance.

Norbolethone had never been marketed for public use, which made it helpful to athletes seeking an undetectable edge. The substance, also known as Genabol, became popular among Olympic athletes during the 2000 Sydney Games.

Arnold, the Illinois chemist who supplied the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative with undetectable performance-enhancing drugs, is among five people who have pleaded guilty in the BALCO probe.

The indictment adds cycling, a sport often associated with doping, to a probe that has exposed steroid use in professional baseball, football and track and field.

Thomas, a Yazoo City, Miss. native, was a silver medalist in the individual sprint in the 2001 World Track Cycling Championships. Her efforts to gain a place on the 2000 U.S. Olympic team ended shortly before the games after her testosterone levels were found to be high.

She has always maintained her innocence and said the positive results may have been triggered by contraceptives she was using.

The indictment accuses Thomas of lying when she testified she never used performance-enhancing drugs. She also is said to have lied when she testified that she did not get illegal drugs from Arnold, who was convicted in the scandal earlier this year and is serving a three-month sentence in a Morgantown, W.Va. federal prison.

Last month, Trevor Graham, coach to track sensations Marion Jones, Justin Gatlin and Tim Montgomery, was indicted for allegedly obstructing the steroids probe. He has pleaded not guilty.

Authorities ordered Thomas to make an initial appearance Jan. 5 in federal court.

Track coach Graham maintains innocence in BALCO probe

By DAVID KRAVETS and PAUL ELIAS, Associated Press Writers
November 16, 2006

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) -- Trevor Graham, who has coached Olympic champions Marion Jones and Justin Gatlin, pleaded not guilty Thursday to accusations he hindered a federal steroids investigation targeting baseball star Barry Bonds and other high-profile athletes.

Graham is charged with three counts of making false statements to federal agents in an indictment issued Nov. 1 by the grand jury investigating performance-enhancing drugs in professional sports.

He was freed on $25,000 bond after appearing briefly before U.S. Magistrate Edwin Chen. His attorney, Gail Shifman, entered the plea on Graham's behalf.

Graham did not comment, but Shifman told reporters outside court that "he'll be vindicated" at trial. If convicted, Graham faces a maximum of 15 years in prison and a $750,000 fine.

Shifman declined to answer questions about whether Graham supplied athletes with performance-enhancing drugs or told athletes where they were available, as the indictment alleges. Graham was granted immunity for his cooperation but not from prosecution for making false statements.

Shifman said the charges were "really regrettable," because Graham's intention had been to clean up track and field.

Three years ago, he helped spark the steroid investigation by anonymously mailing a vial containing "the clear," a previously undetectable steroid, to the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency. The probe has netted five convictions, including that of Patrick Arnold, the Illinois chemist who produced the clear for the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative.

Bonds' trainer, Greg Anderson, also was convicted in the BALCO investigation. The grand jury is examining whether Bonds committed perjury when he told a 2003 grand jury that he never knowingly used steroids. He testified he believed Anderson had supplied him with flaxseed oil and arthritis balm.

San Francisco U.S. Attorney Kevin Ryan said after the hearing that the government's steroid probe "is an ongoing investigation."

"Whether or not there will be more indictments," he told KGO-AM, "only time will tell."

Graham operates Raleigh, N.C.-based Sprint Capitol USA, a team of about 10 athletes that includes Gatlin, the 100-meter co-world record holder who tested positive for testosterone and other steroids in April. He also coached Jones, a sprinter who won five medals at the 2000 Sydney Games, and her ex-boyfriend Tim Montgomery, formerly the world's fastest man who was suspended from competition for two years for doping. Following Graham's indictment, Olympic 200-meter gold medalist Shawn Crawford and former U.S. 100-meter champion Me'Lisa Barber announced they would no longer train with him.

In August, the U.S. Olympic Committee banned Graham from its training centers, because several of his athletes have been suspended for doping offenses. Last week, the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency notified Graham in a letter that he is accused of violating doping rules, sources have told The Associated Press.

Bodybuilder collapses, dies

A Rhode Island man who was planning to make a comeback in his favorite sport of bodybuilding collapsed and died while preparing for a local competition.

Anthony D'Arezzo, 44, of Johnston, R.I., was in Pittsburgh for the weekend's NPC Teen, Collegiate and Masters National Championships bodybuilding competition when he collapsed Friday afternoon in his hotel room at Sheraton Station Square.

An autopsy yesterday ruled that Mr. D'Arezzo died of cardiomyopathy, according to the Allegheny County medical examiner's office.

Mr. D'Arezzo had long battled heart disease, said friend Dave Palumbo.

According to a resume posted on Mr. D'Arezzo's Web site, he had not participated in a major bodybuilding event since 1997.

"He was trying a comeback," said Mr. Palumbo, who spoke with Mr. D'Arezzo earlier on Friday.

Mr. D'Arezzo was a fitness trainer in Providence, R.I. The competition was taking place at the Sheraton.

DISCUSS Dave Palumbos bodybuilding here... Have we found the link? my thoughts: people, get off your fat ass and go do cardio...clean up your diet and train. Research with mice has identified how diet drugs such as Fen-Phen work to activate the brain chemical serotonin, which curbs appetite.

The finding could lead to new diet drugs that don't have the dangerous cardiac side effects associated with Fen-

Phen, which led it to be banned in 1997, after it had been used for almost a decade, the researchers said.

"We wanted to look at the pathways and molecules involved in the anorexic properties of drugs like Fen-Phen," said lead researcher Dr. Joel Elmquist, a professor of internal medicine at the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas, and director of the Center for Hypothalamic Research.

Trenbolone Enanthate

Trenbolone Enanthate is a drug that's exclusive to the underground market. In other words, you won't see it with the Organon or STERIS label on it. It was produced as a cheaper alternative to Parabolan, by a leading underground lab several years ago. When I first got my hands on it, I sent it away to a large lab to have it tested for purity and although they replied that it was probably about 90% pure, they couldn't be totally sure because they had no test sample to compare it to. So what's really interesting here, from a philosophical point of view, is that the underground actually began to produce their own unique products instead of simply producing clones of the steroids already available at the pharmacy. Other than the ester, which only effects the blood plasma levels of a steroid, peak concentration, and active life, this drug is identical to Parabolan and Trenbolone Acetate- differing only in the fact that it is active in the body for a longer time.

Amphetamines = Bullshit!

The NFL is trying to classify meth and other amphetamines in the same category as steroids, so what's the implication? steroids are recreational drugs? Mr. Harold Henderson, please shut the hell up and stop lying to people!

Amphetamines were previously listed as a "substance-abuse drug," but are now in the same category as steroids and other enhancers that carry much stronger penalties. This season will serve as a transition year, where a first positive test would bring a warning and put a player into the drug program.

But in 2007, amphetamines will be tested for on a regular basis. A first positive test will result in a four-game suspension, the same penalty now levied for positive steroids tests. Major League Baseball also started testing for amphetamines this season as part of its steroids policy.

Harold Henderson, NFL executive vice president of labor relations, said the league and union worked together to toughen the penalties for amphetamines after the Congressional hearings last year on drugs in sports.

"We never looked at it as a competitive issue for our players, like steroids and other things, but realized the possibility that some players would use it for a gameday edge," Henderson said Tuesday in a phone interview from San Diego, where he was attending the annual rookie symposium. "The union quickly agreed with us."

Dostinex was originally introduced to the bodybuilding community by the anti-aging crowd. About a decade ago, the only place you could really find this stuff being sold was on mail order lists for various life-extension clinics. Although they are, frankly, a very weird bunch of people, the life-extensionistas were among the first to find and make available a lot of the stuff that eventually found its way into athletic circles, like Dostinex and other such nootropics (drugs that increase mental activity).

Dostinex is one of those drugs. I first saw it on an anti-aging clinic's price list about a decade ago, and more recently, I saw it being discussed by various people who are "in the know" on the internet. The former fact made it slightly interesting to me, while the latter had exactly the opposite effect. Actually, I first mentioned it in an ancillary article I wrote several years ago, but recently I decided to do some more research on it, and I have to admit, it's a very interesting drug. Before I explain what it does, I think a discussion of some important hormones and enzymes are in order.

End of Schering primo?

Bayer is known for going "legit", stopping sales of 'grey' area products from the companies they buy.

"The way is now clear for the Bayer Group to acquire Berlin-based pharmaceuticals company Schering AG," it said in a stock market statement. "The attainment of a three-quarters majority was the last remaining condition of the takeover offer."

Steroid stash seized at home

A twice-convicted local drug dealer has been tied to the area's largest seizure of illegal steroids, arrested in a case that sheds light on the surprisingly open world of buying and selling the substances on the Internet.

Authorities say the dealer -- Christopher J. Magnano, 33, of Rensselaer -- would buy the substances overseas and then resell them through the relatively anonymous, home-delivery offered by the Web. Police said it would have been coincidence had any of his steroid customers been local. Using the Internet made his reach global, they said.

Magnano is accused of dealing substances that included human growth hormone, the anabolic steroids dianabol and tamoxifen, a cancer drug injected by steroid users to enhance the absorption of testosterone.

Anabolic steroids and synthetic hormones, which are used to rapidly add muscle mass when combined with a workout regimen, are openly offered by a number of Web sites, many of which are based overseas.

Welcome

Welcome to i Steroids. com. Please feel free to visit out anabolic steroids message board and forums, they are free.

Just remember, steroids are not to be taken lightly, this is the place for your to research before you jump in.

iSteroids.com was created to target the bodybuilders who are into anabolic steroids. The hobby and, maybe, career of body building involves the use of testosterone, winstrol, supplements and dianabol. This is of course just a small part of the equation. We never want to create a drug addiction which involved drug and steroid abuse with products like deca durabolin.

Fitness addiction is a good thing, but steroid addiction is not. You must learn to use steroids in proper ways which include PCT (post cycle therapy) and proper supplements during the cycle.

Since the conception of i steroids . com, the steroids community has changed greatly. Steroid abuse is rampant with people starting to use the drug at stages of their life at which it's unnecessary. Steroids are not a joke, this is not a drug you should take lightly. Just the other day, an article about anabolic steroids appeared on google news discussing the fact that anabolic steroids are the next "bad drug." This would NOT be a discussion topic if steroids were not abused. Again, I repeat, do not take these drugs lightly, they can be dangerous IF Abused!
